first car was brought to a sudden halt by a sentinel who thrust a bayonet against the windshield.

"Got to search this car for bombs and explosives," said the guard, as two soldiers sprang forward. The chauffeur looked worried and finally exclaimed, pointing to one of the occupants of the car:

"Sny, that's Charles E. Hughes, Republican candidate for President of the United States. You don't think he's carrying explosives, do you?"

"I dunno," was the unruffled retort. "I've got to go through everybody here, even if it's the King of England. Tell the gent to get out."

Then the sentinel removed every cushion from the car and looked under it, over it and into it, leaving it with many backward glances, as if he felt sure that something was being concealed from him. Meanwhile, Mr Hughes and his wife stood smilingly aside and permitted the search to go on, and just to show that he had no fear, Mr. Hughes supported himself with the aid of the bayonet.

But that was not the full extent of the search to which the Hughes party was compelled to submit. On the return trip the United States custom house official, not to be outdone by his Canadian associate, insisted upon searching the party to make sure that

Strenuous Day Planned

for Hughes at Detroit

Detroit, Aug. 6.—Charles E. Hughes will arrive here shortly after 8 o'clock to-morrow and a strenuous day has been mapped out for him.

Mr. Hughes will hold a public reception at his hotel at 9 o'clock, later meeting the delegates and alternates to the Republican National Convention on to Chicago and make such arrangements as have not already been made for the meeting and reception there.

When the Hughes Pullmans pulled out of the Grand Central Station everybody was certain that no new stops would be added to the itinerary already published. It is evident, however, that this statement must have been that this statement must have been made with reservations, as applications for speeches are coming in from various quarters that cannot be ignored. An additional meeting was scheduled to-day for San Diego, Cal., and it is possible that the extreme end of the tour may be materially changed in order to sandwich in several stops between Lexington, Ky., and Portland, Me., where the schedule of meetings now shows none.
